

Let It Ride

Let It Ride is a variation of five card stud where the player wagers on a poker hand consisting of three cards in the player's hand and two community cards. The payout is determined by the ranking of the player's hand and the payout schedule.

How to Play

Let It Ride compares the player's poker hand with a payout chart, rather than comparing it with the other players' hands or the dealer's hand. The player's hand consists of the player's three cards and the dealer's two cards. Winners are paid according to the payout schedule (pair of 10's or better, two pair, etc.). After looking at his three cards, each player has the option of pulling back the first bet or leaving the wager there. To leave the bet live is to "let it ride."

The dealer then exposes one community card. The players then each have the option of pulling back the second bet or letting it ride. (They can't add their first bet back on if they get a better hand, however.) After each player decides whether to pull back the second bet, the cards are placed face down on the designated area of the layout and may not be touched again. The dealer then turns up the second community card and in a counterclockwise direction, turns the three cards of each player face up. All losing wagers are then collected, and then all winning hands are paid by the dealer according to the payout schedule.
